Dear Authors,

For your convenience, a similarity report produced by Cross Check, one of the most widely used anti-plagiarism systems in the world. Cross Check is an anti-plagiarism system that is dedicated to editors and publishers. The similarity index for your situation is twenty (20) per cent. According to the specifications laid out in the standard, the similarity index must be at least 10% and no higher. If your index is higher than this number, it indicates that you have to modify your article within the next thirty days. Please exercise caution, as the Cross-Check function not only looks for terms that have been lifted word for word from other publications but also for lines that are very similar to those other publications but have been paraphrased. Therefore, it indicates that in some instances, the single words or phrases are italicised or underlined. It signifies that the system found that this sentence is too similar to the source and also has to be changed. Also, it should be changed because the system found it. Be aware that you can only view the summary report (the PDF attachment) but that the Editorial Board can also view the sources while they are working in the system; as a result, you should pay close attention to your article when you are updating it. Please take note that we adhere to international standards for publishing against dishonesty. This implies that after the second report for the revised article, we, as the Editorial Board, should inform your university that plagiarism was detected. This is only the case if the text needs to be prepared according to the required standards. I am grateful to you for your comprehension.

Best regards,
Secretariat of PJMS

Dear Authors,

Please accept my sincere gratitude for the contribution you made to the upcoming PJMS edition. Please refer to the PDF files that our DTP specialist has created and saved as proofs of your article. Within the next couple of days, it would be greatly appreciated if you could prepare the author's corrections to the provided proofs. After the final DTP has been completed, the number of pages will be adjusted after all of the articles' adjustments have been made. When correcting, you must be as specific as humanly feasible. Please use the yellow highlighter on all the spots where you want to make changes. Please be clear about which words you want to be added and where they should go when you want to add a missing comment. We ask that you provide detailed instructions, such as changing " Old text " to "New text." At the very end of the article, under the box labelled "Author's," please make sure to check the following: Your full postal address (name of the university, postal address, country, and e-mail address), as well as your ORCID number, are preferred. In the case of publications written by more than one author, we demand that you specify the relative contributions of each author. I am grateful to you for having such great understanding. Please keep in mind that at this stage in the process, you are only permitted to make changes that are required and small.

Please be aware that we can only make modifications in the event of a big catastrophe. At this point, we cannot make any changes to the text itself or the formatting of any minor details. I am grateful to you for your comprehension.
