Decision: Major revisions required

The paper provides a clear overview of the study's objectives, methodology, and significance. It effectively introduces the topic of cybercrime in Indonesia, highlights the importance of a robust legal framework and public administration in combating cybercrime, and identifies the research gap that the study aims to address. However, there are a few areas where the paper could be improved:

1. While the paper mentions the keywords "Cybercrime, Public Administration," it would be helpful to include a few more specific keywords that capture the main focus of the study. This would assist readers in finding the study when searching for related research.
2. While the paper mentions that Indonesia has extensive policies, articles, and legal frameworks to address cybercrime, it does not provide specific findings or results from the study. Including key findings or insights would enhance the reader's understanding of the research and its implications.
3. The research methodology employed in this study is qualitative in nature, which is appropriate for examining the role of public administration in combating cybercrime in Indonesia and the legal framework in place. However, the use of interpretivism as a research philosophy and the adoption of a standard legal research method needs to be presented.
4. The paper mentions that the study has practical implications, but it does not elaborate on what these implications are. Providing practical recommendations or actions that could be taken based on the study's findings would add value to the paper.
5. The paper does not provide sufficient context for why this research is important or timely. It would be beneficial to include a brief explanation of the current state of cybercrime in Indonesia, any recent trends or incidents, and the potential consequences of inadequate cybersecurity measures.

Reviewer -BDecision: Major revisions required

The paper provides an overview of the legal framework related to cybercrime in Indonesia, highlighting laws and regulations that support cybersecurity and combat cybercrime. The review also emphasizes the need for comprehensive policies and standardized coordination to optimize the implementation of these laws and regulations. However,

1. The role of public administration in combating cybercrime is discussed, emphasizing the importance of strong and effective cybersecurity laws and policies that adhere to international standards. There is a need for comprehensive infrastructure, network monitoring systems, and information security measures.
2. The results and discussion section outlines the governance of cybercrime in Indonesia, involving government agencies such as the Ministry of Communication and Informatics and their roles in coordinating cybersecurity policies. However, the legal framework related to cybercrime needs to be discussed, along with the current policies in place to prevent cybercrime.
3. There should be a separate section on obstacles and challenges faced by public administration in combating cybercrime, addressing issues such as rapid technological advancements, low cyber security awareness, inadequate legislation, budget constraints, and the lack of coordination between the public and private sectors.
4. In conclusion, the study highlights the need for specific and effective cybercrime control policies in Indonesia, as the existing policies are considered generic and lacking in specificity. The government and authoritative entities are called upon to take cyber security more seriously and implement measures to prevent cyberattacks. The study provides valuable insights into the role of public administration and the legal framework in combating cybercrime in Indonesia.
5. The theoretical implications section provides a brief overview of the study's contribution to understanding the role of public administration in combating cybercrime. However, it would be beneficial to provide more specific details about the findings of the research and how they contribute to existing knowledge in the field. The mentioning of future research directions would be a positive aspect.
